A quiet West St. Paul neighborhood erupted in rage last week as residents and angry business owners fought with riot police in a tense confrontation that continues to unfold over the police shooting of a man at an illegal street party and an attack on a new restaurant. The fallout has become the latest controversy to wrinkle the local police chief's plans to merge two small police departments and one of the busiest police agencies in Minnesota. Officials say a man was hit by a bullet last Tuesday, when West St. Paul Police officers were investigating a large party on west of West St. Paul High School. He was taken to the hospital, where he was pronounced dead. The family's attorney, Tom Plunkett, says it's a tragedy but not necessarily evidence of police brutality. "They had to use the Taser on someone who was unarmed," Plunkett says. "And they had to shoot someone." Plunkett is calling for an independent investigation and says he hasn't heard back from the city about the case. He says the man was unarmed and was shot in the back, and he thinks the officers fired their weapons without first pulling out their weapons. Police Chief Tom Smith says the officers didn't know it was a party when they arrived and that the Taser was used because they were dealing with a mentally ill person and officer safety was at stake. It's a case Smith has fielded in the past. In a recent article in The Morning News, Smith wrote about using a Taser on a homeless man who was complaining about a Taser being used on him in 2002. Smith says he's been 2d92ce491b
